CONQUERED MILES

BY BLESSEDY M. CERVANTES
Editor-in-Chief

The new normal has become a "usual normal" as educational leaders and members adjust to the different curricular reforms brought by the global health crisis.

School administration has equipped themselves with 21st-century leadership and management skills in handling the organization and assuring that the schools are safe and secured. Teachers, on the other hand, are now used to digital classrooms and tools for online teaching.

The students also manage to actively participate in virtual classroom activities, access e-learning materials, and engage in interactive TV and radio programs.

Other external stakeholders like the parents and local government units also show their camaraderie and support the schools that make education more efficient against all odds.
