Artifacts, Ecofacts, and Features in Archaeology

The #NationalMuseumPH invites you to the free webinar entitled Artifacts, Ecofacts, and Features in Archaeology on September 6, 2022 (Tuesday), from 9:00 AM to 12:00 PM via zoom application.

This event is the fourth installment of the six-part National Museum of the Philippines Archaeology Division lecture series, which aims to discuss the material evidence encountered during archaeological excavations and the recent projects wherein NMP Archaeology Division personnel have been involved.

Social Science students and teachers are invited to join this activity.

The Artifacts, Ecofacts, and Features in Archaeology lecture features an overview of the national archaeological collections, preliminary analysis and interpretation of the materials retrieved from archaeological sites, and updates on current research and projects of the division. One of the facets of studying the human past is through the analysis of archaeological record found in archaeological sites. The archaeological record, comprised of artifacts, ecofacts, and features, left by communities that once occupied an area are meticulously studied, recorded, and analyzed by archaeologists to shed light about the human past, including habitation, mode of subsistence and human-environment interaction.
